“Digital News: Genealogical Research in Online Newspapers” 1:30

Do you sometimes feel exhausted trying to keep all the newspaper content that is available online straight? Learn how to identify both subscription-based and free newspaper sites, explore search strategies, and showcase the wide array of fantastic genealogical content that awaits you in online newspapers

“Perilous Assumptions: Revisiting Those First Finds” 3:15

Despite the best of intentions, many family history researchers – particularly as beginners – make incorrect assumptions about records that don’t “fit.” Learn about what family history discoveries may await, when you explore those past assumptions and revisit past mistakes.

Our Speaker: Kris Rzepczynski

Kris is an archivist at the Archives of Michigan in Lansing, with a special interest in genealogy and local history. For over 20 years he has worked closely with local societies and researchers, both in assisting them with their research and in giving programs to their local groups. His position at the Archives has given him an interesting perspective on research, resources, and technological trends
